JAP SHIPS CRIPPLED, TOO, AT PORT ARTHUR

Makaroff Had Gone Out to Fight Togo at Sea and Russians Say He Inflicted Much Damage Before His Flagship Was Sunk and He Lost His Life.

PORT ARTHUR, April 15.—The destruction of the Petropavlovsk was preceded by a battle between the Russian torpedo boat division and a number of Japanese torpedo boats that lasted most of Tuesday night. Officers who participated in the engagement say that the Japanese fleet suffered severe damage, but definite information on that point has not been gained.

Soon after daylight on Wednesday morning it was seen that the torpedo-boat destroyer Bezstrashni was in a bad way. She was crippled and had been cut off from the rest of the Russian torpedo-boat flotilla, and although her men were fighting bravely the Japanese were in such force that she could not shake them off.

The cruiser Bayan steamed out to the aid of the Bezstrashni, and when she was sighted by the Japanese they retired. An attempt was made to get the damaged torpedo-boat into the harbor under the protection of the Bayan, but she sank at 7 A. M.

LURED OUT BY THE JAPS.

The torpedo boats of the Japanese that had been driven off by the Bayan were soon out of sight, and it was supposed that the attack had been repulsed, when suddenly six Japanese warships made their appearance. So far as could be observed they were alone save for the torpedo boats, and Admiral Makaroff ordered the entire squadron out to meet them.

As the Russian fleet steamed out to sea the Japanese vessels withdrew. Admiral Makaroff kept on his course, and the next observed was the presence of sixteen or seventeen Japanese ships of war, including battle-ships and cruisers, with numerous torpedo boats and destroyers.

The Japanese advanced in force, a formidable array of fighting vessels, and Admiral Makaroff fell back to the roadstead, where he signalled the ships of his squadron to form in line of battle. This manoeuvre was in process of accomplishment when, precisely at 10 A. M., there was a terrific explosion under the Petropavlovsk and she sank in a few minutes.

THE DAMAGE TO THE POBEDA.

At about the same time the Pobeda was injured amidships and steamed to the inner harbor, leaving the rest of the fleet in battle array. The Japanese did not approach to the roadstead and soon put about and disappeared. An examination of the Pobeda shows that her injuries are not serious.

Grand Duke Cyril, Capt. Jakovlev, Lieut. Yakovsky and Midshipmen Syllite, Jenish and Yakovlev were the only officers rescued from the wreck of the Petropavlovsk. There are conflicting reports as to the number of seamen rescued, one source of information making it thirty-two and another fifty-one.

All of those saved from the Petropavlovsk were picked up by the torpedo gunboat Gaydamak, which had gone out from the harbor with Admiral Makaroff's fleet.

No official statement has been made here as to the cause of the destruction of the Petropavlovsk. It is said by the officers in authority that the source of the explosion that sunk the vessel has not been ascertained.

Viceroy Alexieff, who was at Mukden when the disaster occurred, started promptly for Port Arthur to personally assume temporary command of the fleet.

(Special to The Evening World.)
WASHINGTON PARK, BROOKLYN, April 15.—The Giants won their second game from Ned Hanlon's trolley Dodgers at these grounds to-day, the final score being 5 to 2. Both McGinn and Cronin pitched good ball, but the "Iron Men" got the best support which, coupled with his perfect control, managed to win the game for him. Both teams secured six hits, those of McGinn being so scattered that they didn't tally many runs. About 4,000 persons witnessed the game. The feature of the game was a great one-hand catch by H. McGinn, and McGinn's drive over the right field for a home run.

First Inning.
Brown flied to Lumley. Devlin out to Doyle. McGinn was a good water and was rewarded with a free pass to first. McGinn patted a grounder to Little. McGinn and was the third out. NO RUNS.

Second Inning.
Bergin got to Cronin on a safe hit. Sheppard's long fly to deep right was gathered in by Brown. Lumley was hit with a pitched ball. Strong moving to second. Sammy laid too far off the bag and was caught napping. Doyle's little pop up to the infield was caught by Dahien. NO RUNS.

Third Inning.
McGinn flied out to first. Doyle was the next victim on sky-scraper, which Jack Doyle captured. Gilbert also flied a high fly which Brown caught. McGinn flied to Doyle. Doyle flied to Cronin. NO RUNS.

Fourth Inning.
McGinn flied out to first. Doyle was the next victim on sky-scraper, which Jack Doyle captured. Gilbert also flied a high fly which Brown caught. McGinn flied to Doyle. Doyle flied to Cronin. NO RUNS.
